A pretty little miss of about 14 summers nearly broke up a wedding party at Linwood a short while ago. It was about the first wedding that she had ever attended, and she felt the importance of the occasion very much. After ple went up to the bride and groom and made remarks to them. She supposed that they were words of congratulation or condolence or something of that sort, but her ideas of the proper thing to say under the circumstances were little vague. Finally she whispered to an old friend of the family who was near by:

"What shall I say when I go up there?" she faltered.

"Oh, just anything to show them that you are glad they are married. Just something complimentary, you know." In a few minutes the little miss had made her way to where the happy couple were receiving the congratulations. There was quite a crowd around, but she didn't mind them one bit. She marched straight up to the bride and, extending her hand, said: "I wish you many happy returns of

"Hello! Sammy," and "Howdy Sudie?" "Howdy, doc.," the girl responded.

The girl looked towards her playmate, and, instructed by some masonic sign known to childhood, she replied: "No, thankee, sir. Sammy is going to see me home." "Well, bye-bye."

As we drove the doctor remarked: "Those youngsters will probably get paddled.

"For what?" I asked.

"In this case Tom Riggan and Dick Rutherford had been the best of friends until two years ago, at hogkilling time, when they fell out over guessing at the weight of a fat porker. Their guesses were about 50 pounds apart, and as the hog was found to weigh just halfway between, out of that sprang a misunderstanding, harsh words followed and the breach has grown wider with years. Between the two houses there is an enmity as strong as that between the Capulets and Montagues, in Shakespeare's 'Romeo and Juliet.' The women folks on the opposite sides toss their heads and don't speak to each other. The servants frequently fight and the two heads avoid each other lest they do something rash."

A few days ago I rode with the doctor along the turnpike, where the foregoing conversation had occurred two decades ago. The "Devil's Lane" was gone. Where it had been was the center of a long avenue of stately away their energies in overwork, in Lombardy poplars with alternating apple trees, and at the head of the ing food, or healthful exercise, and alameda stood a great, hospitablelooking mansion having a wide por- tration, or some other weakness, from tico in front, whose roof was supported by huge and white Corinthian | time to recover .- Success. I could see no sign, in either direction, of the former homes of the Riggins and Rutherfords.

The doctor, now an elderly man,

WHEN GRAPES HANG PURPLE. long since retired from active practice of his profession, turned our conveyance into the alameda, and in a few minutes we were being received at the steps of the portico by a handsome young man of about 30, whose hair was prematurely white, and a petite matron of near the same age, whose charm of manner and gracious bearing brought glimpses of the "old regime."

They were Squire Som Riggin and Their fathers, Dick Rutherford and Tom Riggin, had long been gathered to their fathers, the two farms were joined into one and all the interests consolidated.

We partook of a glorious dinner with the Riggins and laughed together about the incident of 20 years before when we met Sudie and Sam at the mouth of the "Lane."

As the doctor and I rode home under the undressing trees, and upon the carpet of purple, gold and crimson that was made by their cast-off clothing of autumn dyed leaves, the old healer told me how it had all happened.

"No amount of punishment inflicted by their respective parents could keep those youngsters apart. They were inseparable when it was possible for them to be together. The little girl would weave wreaths of jessamine flowers and vines for Sammy and Sammy caught her butterflies and filled her lap with blue-tinted daisies fresh from the moss-lined brook that flowed through the meadow. Whippings, threats, confinements, entreaties by their parents that they keep away from each other, did no good. To the contrary, it seemed the greater the opposition the more binding their childish affection.

"Of course, their meetings were clandestine. They would seek out refamily calls. It was in central Ken- mote corners in the pastures or hide among the honeysuckle bushes over in the early autumn season. As we on the ridge and remain for hours drove over one of the smooth in each other's company, perfectly and white turnpikes, I observed a oblivious to and absolutely uninflunarrow and curious lane which inter- enced by the almost assured "spanksected the turnpike at right angles. ings" they knew they would receive

"HEIMWEH."

"Heimweh!" What a tender feeling Surges in the wanderer's heart
At this word! Long-vanished pictures
From sweet "memory's casket" start!

Home, that little low-eaved dwelling,
Mother sitting in her chair,
Father, brothers, sisters, playmates, And the happy welcome there.

"Heimweh!" Oh, the world is dreary, Cold and selfish so it seems; Hours of ease and fame and fortune Are but childhood's golden dreams, Dreams, that like the Sodom apples, Turn to ashes cold and gray,

Leaving but a weary pilgrim
Longing for his childhood's day.

"Heimweh!" He may yearn forever!
Broken is the little band
Gathered once around the fireside,
In his own "lieb Heimathland;" Some are out upon life's ocean, Battling fiercely on the deep. Some within the quiet churchyard Silent lie in that last sleep. "Heimweh!" Is there then no comfort? Is his happiness all past?

Weary, lonely, heart-sick wanderer,
Peace and joy shall come at last!
Here shall change to blest hereafter,
Rest reward all those who roam;
In the mansion of "Our Father."

We shall find a perfect home.

cab in Adams street to take him to the depot.

It wasn't the Kenwood bedroom that inclosed him in the morning, and it really wasn't the best sleeping car he had ever seen. He was inclined to complain of the inattention of the porter, and the lack of traveling comforts in general, when he noticed a very fair young woman in a proper gray dress, trying to put a parcel in the rack above the window.

"Why don't you have the porter do that?" asked Raymond.

"Why don't you do it?" asked the woman, in return.

So he bent over and helped her.

"If you don't keep after them they won't do anything," said Raymond. "What you need is your breakfast," said the young woman.

He thought over that for a moment, and then asked her if she had eaten. "Certainly," she replied. "An hour

His eyebrows lifted. This was a new style-to him. She was simply natural and unaffected-not bold. He had no thought of presuming. He respected

She stooped above his bed, smoothed back his hair, and kissed him very tenderly. Then she told the nurse it was time for the medicine.

He sent her out of the room while the lawyer was making the deed of gift. Next morning the rest of the party was back from the Yosemite, and there was a pretty little wedding in the parlor of the hotel.

Getting Money Under False Pretenses The comment of the village critic iv. Massachusetts, who remarked after a performance by the Chicago orchestra that "it is a long ways to bring a drum from Chicago just to hit it once," calls to mind the excitement of Kansas City at the first performance of Italian opera. The sale opened at eight in the morning and the night before half the town camped out in order to be early at the box-office. One of the richest men in the country round about was Uncle Andrew, and he shared in the general excitement although he "let on" that he was going merely to please his wife.

The night of the entertainment Uncle Andrew arrayed himself in his very best clothes and was one of the first to arrive. The opera was "Lucia di Lammermoor," and the cast was well divided among Italians, Germans, French and English. A few minutes before nine o'clock the street door opened, and Uncle Andrew appeared. He walked solemnly back to the end of the room, pulled a chair before the grate fire and sat down to smoke.

"Hello, Uncle Andrew," said one of the younger members, "I thought you were at the opera."

"Been," replied the old gentleman.

"Didn't you enjoy it?"
"Enjoy it?" Uncle Andrew plainly showed his deep disgust at the ques-

THE HOME HOSPITAL.

One Room That Should Be Fitted Up and Reserved for Nursing the Sick.

It has been suggested by latter-day sanitarians that the plan of all houses in the future should include one room especially for use in illness-a hospital room. It is urged that this could be school, and tried to find out what he done without any great additional expenditure of money or loss of space because such a room could be used as an ordinary bedroom until the time came to turn it into a sick-room, says Youth's Companion.

Where such a room is out of the question it is not a difficult matter to prepare a hygienic room for sick nursing in the average house or apartment if certain necessary conditions are

In the first place, the best room, in the sense of best lighted and ventilated, should be reserved for this purpose. It should get direct sunlight for some part of every day, and there should be provision for free ingress and egress of air.

The next consideration is the doing away with draperies and upholstery. In a case of severe acute illness, fevers and the like, it is most important that of metal, the necessary articles of furniture should be washable, as also the floor, and, if possible, even the

The new sanitary wall-papers are good in design; a simple painted wall need not be inartistic, and walls that will bear washing do not imply bare desolation. A hardwood floor, or a common stained one, can easily be wiped each day with a damp cloth wrung out of a weak solution of bichloride of mercury; plain chairs and tables and the metal bed can be treated in the same manner. All rugs should be carried away, and felt shoes should be worn if the bare floors cause

It is important to remember that utensils should never be emptied and cleansed in the sick-room. They should be taken outside, and before they are brought back a little clean water, to which has been added some antiseptic solution, such as carbolic acid or chlorides, should be poured into

Finally, if one is suddenly called to take charge of a sick-room, it should never be forgotten that there is no illness to which fresh air is a menace; that the more freely it can be admitted by day and by night, without blowing directly on the bed, the more chance the patient has of a good recovery.

It should be remembered also that a damp cloth, as a cleansing agent, is worth all the brooms and feather dusters ever invented, and that a little common sense is better than much paraphernalia.

While it is undoubtedly true that silk and satin brocades, Lyons woven matelasses and other costly and elegant figured materials are to be among the dominant modes for elaborate evening dress, it does not mean that the old-style, stand-alone qualities are to be revived, for this is far from being the case. The soft, clinging brocades are of the richest quality and purest silk, but they are eminently dainty and feminine, with a fascinating grace, a wondrous luster and an artistic melange of pastel of more pronounced oriental colors; but there remains a total absence of any sort of stiff or wiry effect in any of the latest French

AMERICANIZING WILLIE.

It Caused Much Glee for the Older Chinese with Whom He Lived.

Willie B. Lung was the name he vrote with pardonable pride and some lifficulty. For a Celestial, he wrote vell, read easily, and creased his lavnder trousers with fine effect. His dress was that of the most up-to-date American, and he raised his hat with graceful politeness. Nevertheless, he was a laundryman, although obviously fitted to adorn a higher sphere. His English was fluent and far less intelligible than that of the old Chinaman who sometimes came for the clothes in his place. Willie insisted on talking at all seasons, and was apparently not in the least disconcerted at the blankness of his listener's face. Willie was a Sunday school product, of course, says the New York Tribune.

For a long time the old man had been coming for laundry, and the man of the house, who liked Chinese, was moved to ask what had become of that dash ng young gentleman.

"Gone," said the old man. He was a merry old soul, always smoking placidy, and never did Celestial countenance show a keener sense of humor.

"Gone where?" "Canton," was the laconic reply. Then the old fellow was so seized wit a sense of the fun of the thing that h valiantly went on: "Willie bad boy. He pointed to his queue. "Allee gone Bad boy. Too muchee 'Melican. No can go back, no"-he pointed to his queue again.

"You mean he cut off his hair and now he is afraid to go back to China?

"No 'fraid. Buy it "Bought a pigtail from somebody?" The old man nodded, convulsed with merriment. "Too muchee money," he ejaculated. "Muchee money have pay.

Bad boy. Before the family had ceased to enjoy the idea of Americanized and lavender trousered Willie recklessly bribing someone to furnish the once despised queue, that gentleman was again on hand. He was no less American than ever. The friend of the Chinese congratulated him on his safe return, and offered him a glass of port wine. Willie lrank it with gusto.

"You like it?" inquired the man of the house. "Muchee," said Willie. With an inexpressibly sanctimonious face the Sunday school scholar added, in explanation: "Allee same communion." He it?" took his departure with the conviction that he had made a deep impression on his fellow Christian. And so, indeed,

A few weeks after he proudly announced his marriage to an American girl. His cup of happiness was overflowing. He was evidently hovering on the border of a belief that nobody could tell him from an American, and it was reasonable to suppose that the new wife would give him the final push and land him squarely in it. But a shade of depression was shortly noted

"Where's Willie?" was again asked. "Run. Chop-chop. Hurry," said he, his little eyes almost twinkling out of Editors and Lawyers.

The question of the relative merits of lawyers and editors as to veracity arose recently in a social affair, where both professions were about equally represented. Each, of course, claimed the honors, but the final settlement of the question was left to a representative of each side. The representatives were to prepare essays and submit 17-t5 them to a committee. The best essay would decide the difference. This was the prize essay:

Disaster, Say Inspectors.

Evansville, Ind., Oct 26.-Late this afternoon J. H. Moore and R. Texas state penitentiary convict, H. Williams, local United States steamboat inspectors, gave their report on the city of Golconda disaster, which occurred four miles abov) Paducah August 19th, and in which seventeen lives were

> The report says the accident was caused by a severe windstorm, which came up suddenly, giving but a momentary warning of its presence and striking the vessel before those on board had time to prepare for safety.

The boat, when capsized, left nothing for the officers to do but to go to work and save the lives of those on board.

The inspectors assert that the crew of the boat was in no way responsible for the accident.

"The accident was unavoidable, so far as the officers were concerned" says the report. The report closes with these

For J. W. Tweddle, Marion, Ky COTTON ROOT ROT.

"Dying Cotton" Dreaded by the Planters on Black Land,

Writing from Texas to Home and Farm, a correspondent says: Early planted cotton, where not damaged by storms, would have made an enormous crop had not root rot selzed it. This plague is more to be dreaded by the black land cotton planter than worms or weevils, aithough they don't fail to exhibit their destructive capacity.

This "dying of cotton" is thought by the remedy and after give many to be caused by an excess of al- al if she did not find it is kall in the soil, but that has been proved not to be the case. The mischief is done by a fungous growth on the root. That fungus is partial to certain soils and plants. Our black, waxy soils are its favorite haunt, and cotton, alfalfa and sweet potatoes are its preferred foods. It does not seem to be able to exist where the soil is underlaid with clay. It requires a peculiar combination of heat and moisture to develop the spores of the fungi, and that combination we have had this year, with a result that is very discouraging. In this district we always suffer from the plague, but this year "beats the record." In my county there are thousands of acres of cotton affected, and from 50 to 75 per cent of the acreage is dead.

The spores have been so increased and invigorated by a congenial season that it will be a reckless act to plant cotton on the same land next year.

No absolute remedy has yet been discovered to prevent root rot on badly infected soils, but it has been demonstrated that a change of cotton on to land that has been under other crops for several years has a tendency to mitt-gate the mischief, and I would strongly urge farmers who have had a bad case of "dying cotton" to change the location of their next crop, no matter how foul the land may be. The fouler the land the better chance for the cotton if the foulness is plowed under as it ought to be.

Peanuts For Poultry.

The peanut is one of the best foods that I have ever fed to poultry. It excels corn, wheat or oats for laying bens as well as for growing chicks. Hens or chicks will not get so fat on peanuts as they will on corn or wheat. Hens will lay more eggs, and chicks will grow faster than if fed on corn or wheat. They are a health giving food to all kinds of poultry. They will grow on most any kind of soil from the poorest white sand to a sandy clay. They will get ripe farther north than the very earliest corn. You can raise more peanuts to a given piece of ground than you can of corn or wheat, and not so much work to raise them as it is to raise corn. They are the best food to throw in the scratching shed with tops, and hens can be kept busy all day. They will work for them and lay too. When you go to raise peanuts you must

Selling the Cotton,

Selling the cotton is a very important part of the farm economy of every cotton grower. We are all aware that for several years we have been selling our cotton for too little. We did not think we could prevent this. This was a great mistake. We could have sold for higher prices if we had known how and acted upon common sense. To get a fair price for cotton we must sell slowly. Sell all through the year. Be as long selling as we are growing the crop. Be as long selling as the manufacturers are spinning the crop. In no other possible way can the farmer get the full value of his crop, remarks Southern Cultivator while discussing the Cotton Growers' Protective asso-

Barnum's Monkeys

"All well-all happy-lots Determin the Most Popular Young of fun". That is the regular report from the monkey cage of Barnum's Circus ever since the keepers began dosing the monkeys with Scott's Emulsion. Consumption was carrying off two thirds of them to buy new ones.

One day a keeper accidentally broke a bottle of Scott's Emulsion near the monkey cage and the monkeys eagerly lapped it up from the floor. This suggested the idea that it might do them good. Since then the monkeys have received regular doses and the keepers report very few deaths from consumption. Of course it's cheaper to buy Scott's Emulsion than new monkeys-and that suits the circus men.

Consumption in monkeys and in man is the same disease. If you have it or are threatened with it can you
